Many young men have come to New York blessed with talent, steadfastness and an honorable ambition, who, after years of weary endeavor, have given up the fight; and some have carried the sorrow of his way to the nearest police station, and turning from church one day he found a lost ambition to the grave, and it is the was directed to station 1. world to make his way. He was for a time a reporter on the Philadelphia Press. As a reporter Mr. Davis would never have gained a great repute. Very likely the highly imaginative quality of his intellect may have made it trksome for him to do the plodding and drudgery and to be faithful and patient in the attention to detail and to accuracy which make the best re porters. But as a writer of sketches, of pleasing narratives where his fancy had full play, he quickly won repute in news-paper circles. He was then known as Dick Davis, a most charming fellow, an athlete, whole souled, genial, unaffected, and with the proverbial indifference to the pecunfary matters which characterizes great talent sometimes. The first money he ever received for literary work was ten dollars, and he spent it buying two match safes.

Mr. Davis came to New York in August, 1889, and was employed as a reporter on The Evening Sun. There his merits as a descriptive and delightful sketch writer were speedily appreciated, as well as the some of his companions exceeded him. s only justice to say that while Mr. Davis' stories might have secured him the entree to the magazines on their merits, yet he was undoubtedly aided in these approaches by the distinguished literary repute of his naother, the high reputation as a critic which his father had, and the Intimate social and personal relations which he was
